RELATES THRILLING STORY TO STUDENTS HERE OF HIS ESCAPE FROM "LOW COUNTRIES" OF EUROPE

Harry P. VanWalt, Citizen of Holland, World Traveller and Psychologist, Holds Audience Spellbound As He Tells How Germany Conquered Little Holland and Her 8,800,000 Inhabitants—Speaks at High School During The Assembly Period.

The story of his miraculous and hair-breadth escape from the "low countries" of Europe and subsequent trip to the United States of America was told to students of Bristol high school yesterday by Harry P. VanWalt, a citizen of Holland, a resident for many years of Belgium, world traveler, psychologist, and radio commentator.

The method by which he "reconfiscated" his own car after Nazis claimed it was to be theirs; his harrowing experience as he drove the machine through slowly rising water of the inundated sections of Holland; the trek by car through an area infested with land mines; narrow escapes as with hordes of refugees he and his wife made their escape by automobile, with planes roaring overhead strafing cars with machine gun bullets—all were presented before the students by the speaker who then told of his joy in being able to live in America—the land of the free.

In telling the story of Europe and of his own country, "peaceful little Holland," Mr. VanWalt reminded there were things which might appear as humorous, but which in reality were tragic. "It is not a cheerful tale."

"I want you to remember that Holland was only a little larger than the state of Virginia, and crowded into that territory were 8,800,000 people. The Dutch have a wonderful history. They were moved by the same spirit as you are here in America. They had at one time fought for many years against the Spanish, fighting for their ideals of freedom. For years after gaining that freedom we lived peacefully. Then the Germans came and destroyed all we held dear—all that is sacred to a free people." At this point the speaker told of visiting just a day or so before the invasion of Holland by the Nazis, that section of Holland where he was born and where his family had lived since the year 1215. "I discussed affairs of the day with my old friends there, and was asked if I thought the Germans would violate the neutrality of Holland. I stated I did not believe so, as I trusted the word of von Ribbentrop given the day previous that that would not happen."

"Yet four hours later as I was visiting in Holland my windows rattled with the noise of hundreds of planes. There was the detonation of heavy bombs, and I heard the anti-aircraft fire. I knew my country was at war. Holland is such a small country. We all knew each other. The casualty list was long, and 250,000 men of our army were made prisoners, were wounded or killed. All my friends were killed on the battlefield, or were assassinated in concentration camps. Hitler has a unique method of working. He first tries to get hold of the intellectual part of the country. He knows where the intellect is killed, the great masses cannot stir. All the professors of the university I graduated from have been assassinated. All died within a month of the same ailment, what the Germans called 'throat trouble.' It isn't anything to laugh about.

"After the first world war many Germans, including hundreds of children, were cared for by the Dutch, who gave them food, clothes and shelter. Many were taken into the homes in Holland for long periods of time. Yet on that fateful day at the start of this difficulty in Holland, those same children, now grown to manhood, came over and bombed the homes of their foster parents."

One Man's Opinion

By Walter Kiernan
(I. N. S. Staff Writer)

Remember to adjust your bed-spring to collapse at dawn Monday.

We will have Eastern, Central, Mountain and Pacific War Time.

There is no telling what the Hatfields and the McCoys will do with Mountain War Time.

If you hear gun fire in the hills you will know they have reset their watches.

The old domestic war time was from midnight to four a. m., following lodge night.

It was for husbands with leaky alibis and card-stained fingers.

The new war time will bring civilians to office and factory to doze one hour earlier.

It will save considerable electricity in the evening because we will use it in the morning instead.

Thought for the day: Your time is war time.

GERLACH AGAINST PENSION SYSTEM FOR CONGRESSMEN

Representative From Bucks States Bill is An Administration Measure

WILL VOTE TO REPEAL IT

Does Not Think Federal Official Receiving Over $4,000 Should Get Pension

The Honorable Charles L. Gerlach, Congressman from the Bucks-Lehigh District, today issued a statement outlining his position on the recent pension grant given Congressmen.

Mr. Gerlach's statement follows: Editor of Courier:

In connection with all the newspaper criticism that has been leveled against the recent action of the Congress in placing its membership within the civil service retirement pension system, I want to say to my constituents, through the medium of your paper, that this is an Administration measure; that in addition to Members of Congress the law includes in its provisions the entire Executive Branch of the Government; that I had nothing whatsoever to do with proposing the legislation; that I did not support it; that I do not now come within the provisions of the law and I do not intend at any time in the future to take advantage of its provisions.

Furthermore, I do not believe any Federal official, elective or appointive, who receives a yearly salary of more than $4,000, should be granted a pension. Public officials in the higher salaried brackets should be able to make themselves financially secure for their old age without a pension.

The measure amends the Civil Service Retirement Pension Act of 1920. It was brought before the House under the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which does not require a roll call, and was very cleverly and speedily passed by a voice vote under the leadership of Representative Ramspeck, chairman of the House Committee on the Civil Service. A bill of this kind should have been brought before the House under a rule and debated, after which a record vote should have been taken. If this had been done, I am sure the result would have been quite different.

I am 100% against the whole thing and will vote to repeal the amendment.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES L. GERLACH.

POSTWAR BUSINESS

Practically every discussion of the war boom evokes the remark that the postwar collapse will assess a heavy penalty in business losses and discouragement of young families that were launched on a war boom basis. The remark is based on observations by people who remember the sad reaction after the First World War and have read about the slump that followed exhaustion of a war momentum throughout history.

In a pamphlet just issued by the National War Resources Planning Board, Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, professor of economics at Harvard and adviser to the Federal Reserve Board, argues that "we do not have to take economic defeat after the military victory is won. We can, if we will, maintain business prosperity."

He believes that inflation can be avoided by discouraging the purchase of goods for private use during the war and by taxing away much of the people's spending margin, and that activity in business can be sustained after the war by heavy government borrowing and spending the money to create employment. It is this theory on which the administration is acting.

The trouble with Professor Hansen and economists of the unpayable national debt school is that they do not correctly evaluate the destructive influence of the political opportunist. They assume that government spending will be only for value received, instead of to make votes for a glory-hungry political gang. They do not include in their formula the act of a Hopkins in loading WPA rolls just before election to make votes.

Their theory that the public credit should be used in times of distress and replenished in times of prosperity is sound only if the people intrust its administration to men who have been schooled in competitive enterprise.

ORDER IT NOW

Latest brain child of New York clothes designers for men is a concoction called the Victory Suit. If it's the best they can do, they ought to go in for mental birth control.

The Victory Suit is deserving of mention chiefly for its "without" qualities. A man toggled out in one of these creations would be without a vest, cuffs, pleats, belts and suspenders. He would also have to reacquaint himself with the old-fashioned button. Victory Suits are without zippers.

If the idea were only to save cloth, it would be commendable. But the idea is not confined to the saving of cloth. There is a distinct odor of commercialism about Victory Suits. Tailors are arguing about whether or not they will sell.

If the clothes designers were on the square in their desire to save cloth, they would not stop when they had done away with cuffs, pleats, zippers and vests. They would also find the coat lapel a highly useless piece of masculine frippery. But do Victory Suits do that? On the contrary, they feature lapels. And just so men will know a Victory Suit when they see one, the lapels are formed as large V's.

During the last war Mark Sullivan had one of his suits "turned" by a tailor at a cost, he thinks, $13. Tailors say this operation would now cost from $40 to $50.

"HUTCH" OF THE R.A.F. by PETER MUIR

CHAPTER TWENTY

"My first idea," David continued, "was to float down the Odett in a rowboat. If we could find a rowboat. Undoubtedly, our one hope is to return to England by the sea; so we must get to the shore first. I have changed my idea about the Odett, because it is necessary to go to Concernau where I have a friend, old Yves, on whose tunny boat I have often sailed. If we can locate him he will help us, I am sure."

"Then why not drift down the river?" Pierre asked.

David reached for the pencil stub that was being used for the imaginary scoring. "For two reasons. First, when our way of escape has been discovered that is the place they will search. And second—" he drew a rough map without using names on the face of a playing card—"if we go down the Odett to its mouth we will have to either follow the shorelines to Concernau, or cross over this stretch of open bay." He used the map and pencil to show what he meant. "Both are bad plans in which to be seen until we have been able to obtain Breton fishermen's clothes."

"Eh bien, mon ami, you speak well. I shall lead you from our prison. After that it is your party. Our direction is about southeast, is it not?"

Yes, Hutch said.
"And I think it is better that we meet outside the chateau and go together. Eight arms are stronger than two, just in case—" Pierre's expressive hands made movements to show that he meant in case there was a fight.

All four were in bed, fully dressed, with the blankets pulled around their necks and feigning sleep when the guard passed to see that lights were out.

"Ten o'clock," Pierre whispered across the darkness. "Two more hours. Sleep if you can. I never sleep and shall awaken you. Never once have I missed the changing of the guard. You hear them click their silly heels, and I could set my watch by them—if I had a watch."

But not an eye was closed in spite of the fact that the time seemed interminable. Every so often the guard passed to see that everything was in order, and from the heavy breathing that came from the room (assumed for his benefit) he would have sworn that his charges were enjoying deep slumber. Once he opened the door and played his electric torch on each of the four cots, and Pierre moved in his bed and muttered something, as if annoyed and half awakened by the intrusion. The next time the soldier passed, however, he was lying on his back, mouth open, and snoring in the most natural manner. So natural that Hutch thought he was really sleeping.

In thinking this Hutch was wrong. He heard the clicking of booted heels which announced midnight, and the clanging of the guard, and almost before the door had closed on the retiring watchers Pierre was crouching beside his bed and whispering into his ear. "Now, mon ami."

"Hutch, we better wait until this new fellow makes his first round?"
"No," Pierre whispered, speaking very fast. "As he is alone he makes no rounds. He is afraid to turn his back on the other rooms along the corridor. He does not move unless he suspects something, and then, I warn you, he comes in stocking feet like a cat. I know. I have seen him. Listen. You and your friend stand at the door while Henri lets me down. If the dirty Roche comes kill him, but without noise. It is too late to act gently. Alone!"

Hutch and Rusty could hear the gurgling of the stream below as Henri, using his great strength, swung open the stone. They stood by the door, waiting with bated breath and clamping hearts. Waiting and waiting. Minutes seemed like hours, and the only sound was the music from the running brook.

There was no telling how long they waited, standing silent in the inky blackness, ready to pounce on the soldier if he interrupted them. It must have been hours, weeks, Hutch thought, from the moment when they had heard Pierre splash into the water until a low whistle came to their ears from somewhere beneath the stone. It was Pierre signalling for Henri to pull him out.

"One cannot possibly go up stream," he whispered, at the same time wringing water from his tunic. "The water comes in through a round pipe, and the current is too strong to pass. Down stream—" although Hutch could not see the Frenchman he was sure that he hesitated here to shrug his shoulders—"that is another matter. The current will help us pass. It also exists in a round pipe. The water practically fills this pipe, and once inside there is no return. What is at the other end, or how long it is, I do not know. For one, I shall take the chance."

"And I!"
"And I!"
"And I!"

Pierre chuckled. "The 'ayes' have it. In which case, hold your breath and pray. I shall go first. If there is no exit I shall come back and warn you—perhaps. If I do not back by the time you count a hundred, do not wait. I shall have gotten through—or else—" He attached a blanket around the open stone so that each man could slide down in turn. "And now, my friends, I shall meet you under the open stars—maybe!"

There was the muffled sound of a splash as Pierre hit the water. "Au revoir," he called up in a low tone, after which only the sound of the stream came to those listening above.

Hutch counted, neither slowly nor hurriedly, to one hundred. "Go ahead, Martin," he said. Henri murmured, explaining that as he was the strongest he should be the last, to protect, as he explained it, the flank. This was good military tactic, but Hutch was now the superior officer and insisted. The Frenchman had been in prison for months, had discovered the means of getting away, and it was their privilege to go first. This passed through his mind, but he did not lose time with lengthy explanations. "I am now in command," he said. "Go ahead. We will count to fifty in stead of one hundred. Hurry!" Another splash was heard.

"... forty-five, forty-six, forty-seven, forty-eight, forty-nine—O.K. Rusty, your turn." Without speaking Rusty took his friend's hand and shook it.

"... fourteen, fifteen, sixteen," the American counted, standing there alone in the dark. He was counting to the tempo of his heartbeats, which was fast. "Seventeen, eight—" There was a light behind him.

Like an angry leopard Hutch turned and leaped on the guard, standing in the open door. It was a mighty spring, the violence of which sent the German's automatic clattering across the floor. The man's throat! His throat! was Hutch's single thought. The guard must not be allowed to cry out for help at any cost. Like lightning, the consequences of capture now ran through the American's mind even as he left. Solitary confinement, perhaps the firing squad for his friends and himself. Yes, indeed, he was like a savage animal applying the law of the jungle—the survival of the fittest.

His strong fingers found their mark and closed tightly around the guard's throat as the two went to the floor with a dull thud. At first Hutch was on top, then the German, kicking, clawing and striking out wildly, as they rolled about in the desperate life and death struggle. The German fought with all his force, and he was a powerful man, to free himself of the vice-like grip that was slowly tightening about his neck. He tried to gouge out the airman's eyes with his fingers, but Hutch was alert and lowered his head, to bring it up again under the man's chin with a stunning blow. A chair was hurled across the floor as they thrashed about, and struck the wall noisily. Would it be heard outside?

Hutch was afraid that this death struggle would be heard, and by superhuman efforts doubled the fierceness of his attack. And his grip tightened on the guard's throat. Slowly the German began to weaken and his desperate gasps for breath were fewer and more horrible to hear. At last he rolled onto his back, his arms spread apart and his body limp. His face was in the shaft of dim light which came in through the open door and crossed the floor like a massive dagger blade. David shuddered as he looked down at it.

Hutch loosened his grasp and stood up, thinking fast as he gasped to regain his breath. Then he knelt beside the man and listened for the heartbeats. There were none. The German was dead. Mother of God! He had killed a man with his bare hands. But it was in self-defense. If he had not killed the guard he and his friends would have paid dearly, perhaps with their lives. But the dead German kept glaring up at him in the dim light with bulging, glassy eyes. Anywhere that Hutch moved, the eyes seemed to follow him. He must pull himself together. The others were waiting. Time, his most precious ally, was fleeing.

Escape! That was the thing. Return to England. Yes, and continue the battle for liberty. That was it. Wendy! What must she be thinking. Wendy, Wendy, Wendy! But what to do with the dead German. He had killed him with his own fingers. Instinctively he held out his hands and examined them, first the backs, then the palms. Time was flying, his friend Time. Act! Escape! What about the corpse?

This last question cleared his troubled brain. Action! He must hurry. His friends were waiting. Ah yes, the corpse. He smiled. Survival of the fittest. An idea crossed his mind, and for a brief moment he thought it over and decided that it was good. Silently and hastily he began to strip the German of his uniform. The boots. They must be at the end of the corridor. Taking off his own shoes he ran to where they stood in a corner, waiting patiently for their master's return, and brought them back with him. He was surprised to find that the green-gray uniform fit him as well as it did. The boots were a bit too large, and the fatigue cap a bit too small, but on the whole he felt fairly comfortable. He put his own uniform on the German, except for the shoes. They would not go on. Never mind. When they found the body they would think he had taken them off to move more silently. He threw his shoes into the stream and heard them splash. This was followed by a louder splash as he pushed the inert body through the hole in the floor. He could have left the corpse there in the room for the relief guard to find, but they would be more perplexed if they found no one.

For a moment Hutch listened, but there was no sound

Hughes-Armstrong Wedding
Is Solemnized Here Today

Three sisters of Miss Winifred Ann Armstrong were her attendants, this morning, when at a nine o'clock nuptial mass in St. Mark's R. C. Church, she was wed to Mr. John Francis Hughes, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Officiating in the chancel was the Rev. Father Paul E. Baird, a large company of relatives and friends witnessing the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Armstrong, 310 Jefferson avenue, and Mr. Hughes is the son of Mrs. Mary Hughes, of Brooklyn.

Entering the church to the notes of a bridal march played by Miss Katherine Keating, Linden street, organist, the former Miss Armstrong was given in marriage by her father. Vocal selections were provided by Mrs. Kostka, Croydon, who sang "Ave Maria" (Schubert); and Mr. Percy G. Ford whose selection was "Because."

The sisters of the bride who attended her were inclusive of Mrs. Louis Newburg, Lynbrook, L. I., who was matron of honor; Mrs. John Mulligan, Monroe street, and Miss Ruth Armstrong, Jefferson avenue, bridesmaids. Mr. Hughes' best man was his brother, Mr. Francis Hughes, Wilson avenue, and ushers were Messrs. Seymour Kantor, Farragut avenue; and John Mulligan, Monroe street.

The former Miss Armstrong was attractively gowned in white slipper satin. Her floor-length gown, with lengthy train, was rich in its simplicity. Made princess style it had a sweet-heart neckline with trim of seed pearls at the front; the long sleeves, slightly puffed at the shoulders, ending in points over the hands. The gown buttoned down the back. Her tiara of pearls and orange blossoms held in place a veil of tulle. She wore white satin slippers and carried an arm bouquet of colla lilies.

The trio of attendants of the bride wore gowns which were patterned alike, Mrs. Newburg being attired in aqua, and Mrs. Mulligan and Miss Ruth Armstrong in pink. The long torso style bodices were of lace, and full, floor length skirts of chiffon. Sleeves were bracelet length, and neck-lines were sweet-heart style. Plume head-

Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church
Help us, O God, to tread aright the unknown paths of each successive day. Lead Thou us on. At the close of each day may we be able to look back upon its hours with thanksgiving, that by Thy grace we have heard Thy voice and followed Thy leadership. Guide us in our perplexities; restrain us in our joys; comfort us in our sorrows; guard us in temptations; forgive us of all our sins. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

dressess matched the individual gowns of the maids, these having face veils in the same color tones. Each attendant wore gold slippers; the matron of honor carrying yellow roses, and the bridesmaids pink roses.

A wedding breakfast and reception followed the ceremony, this taking place at Leghorn Farms, Morrisville. Later today, Mr. and Mrs. Hughes will leave for New York City for a week's honeymoon. The travelling costume of the bride will consist of an orchid-toned silk crepe dress, hat of orchid felt, oyster shade coat with blue fox collar; and a corsage of red roses. The newlyweds will make their home at No. 2 Cedar avenue, Croydon.

The bride is a graduate of St. Mark's Commercial School, and Mr. Hughes graduated from the Manhattan High School of Aviation Trades.

Grand Theatre with William Powell and Myrna Loy again cast as Nick and Nora Charles, proves no exception.

Showing the sure touches of Maj. W. S. Van Dyke II, the director who has piloted all the previous "Thin Man" dramas to success, and knowingly cast with a group of comedy-wise supporting players, among them Barry Nelson, Donna Reed, Sam Levene, Alan Baxter and Henry O'Neill, the new episodes of the detective and his scintillating wife in no way falters on the path of true comedy-drama.

BRISTOL THEATRE

The audience at the Bristol Theatre last night acclaimed "Hot Spot," the year's most exciting mystery drama, and stamped Betty Grable, Victor Mature and Carole Landis Hollywood's three most exciting people.

Buck Jones and Tim McCoy, who have starred individually in countless Western pictures, are featured together in "The Gunman from Bodie," now playing at the Bristol Theatre.

Film fans who like a high-voltage horror picture every so often will find "Among the Living" sufficiently thrilling film fare to chill them to their bones. This film and "Tuxedo Junction" open tomorrow.

RITZ THEATRE

Revealing a "surprise talent," Marsha Hunt, currently to be seen on the Ritz screen in the new Edward G. Robinson newspaper drama, "Unholy Partners," makes her debut as a singer in the new production, singing the sentimental ballad, "After You've Gone."

Miss Hunt, whose work in such pictures as "Pride and Prejudice," and "Blossoms in the Dust" has placed her in the front rank of potential stars, came to the screen via the Powers model route and made her initial appearance before the cameras in "These Glamour Girls."

BENSALEM GIRLS BEAT BRISTOL GIRLS; WIN LEAGUE CROWN

Winners Annex Eight Straight Victories In A Row

FINAL SCORE IS 40 TO 28

Bristol Girls Had Lead Until Start of The Final Quarter

(By T. M. Juno)

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Feb. 7.—Add another crown to the list of laurels being won by the Bensalem Township high school girls for last night they defeated Bristol high school to win the Lower Bucks County basketball championship for its sixth championship in a row including two winning teams in both hockey and softball and another winning combination basketball.

Last night's 40-28 victory was the eighth triumph in a row for the girls of Coach Helen Smith and it was a well-earned victory; for again the Bristol team was pressing and led most of the game. Only in the final period did the Owlettes outplay the Bristol girls.

The Bristol girls had the lead from the start until the beginning of that fatal final quarter. Then they crashed and crashed hard. The guarding which had held up wonderfully during the first three sessions went to pieces and they just couldn't stop Eleanor Hughes from scoring those overhead shots. Hughes was held to a pair of field goals until the last quarter when she went on a scoring rampage to count five double-deckers and turn the tide of the game in Bensalem's favor.

Once in the front, the Bensalem defense tightened. Tightened so much that Helen VanAken who was running loose and scoring plenty in the first half of the tilt was blocked in and could not get off on her shots. She was held to a lone fielder in the last period of the contest while neither one of her shooting mates, Kwochka or Cochran could score a point.

It wasn't until the waning moments of the third period that the Owlettes managed to wrest the lead from the girls of Coach Phyllis Kallenbach. They were passing beautifully and kept the ball away from that sharp-shooting Bensalem forward, Doris Ely. Helen VanAken on the receiving end of many passes tossed by Gladys Cochran was taking but one dribble and hitting the nets for field goals to keep Bristol out in front.

But at the last few seconds of the third period, VanAken scored to again put Bristol ahead by one point. This seemed to put the fuse to the blowoff for Hughes scored to put the Owlettes ahead and from then on Bristol was left in the dust while the Bensalemites went on to roll up the 12-point victory.

That the game was going to be close was evident from the start. Kwochka got a foul shot but missed. Bensalem took advantage of the miss and on a pass from Hughes, Ely scored. Kwochka made up for her miss by countering with a twin-pointer to tie the score. VanAken dribbled away from her guard to score for Bristol. On a pass from Cochran, VanAken again counted and Bristol was in front, 6-4. Hughes scored for Bensalem and when VanAken added a field and a foul goal, Bristol had a five-point lead.

Hughes missed a field goal but Lamont took the rebound and converted but VanAken again stepped into the picture to score, making the count, 11-6. Hughes added two for Bensalem but Kwochka scored from under the net to give Bristol a 13-8 edge but this was shaved to 13-12 as Lamont scored twice from the floor.

When Mary Bell fouled Lamont and she made good on the gift shot, the count was deadlocked, 13-13. But VanAken converted a foul and shortly after Kwochka made a fielder. On a pass from Lamont, Ely scored to clip the Bristol lead to 16-15. On a fine dribble past her guard, VanAken again registered but Hughes retaliated for Bensalem. Not to be out-done, VanAken added two more to Bristol's total but at the whistle, Lamont scored to make the count read: Bristol, 20; Bensalem, 19.

VanAken scored a foul to start the third period and Cochran added a field goal. Ely took a long shot and made good to make the count, 23-21. Lamont then deadlocked the score with an under-the-net goal. Meisinger fouled Cochran who made it and Bristol went ahead again but only for a short time as Hughes whipped a pass to Ely who scored and Bensalem went ahead for the first time during the game. Bristol took back the lead as VanAken again scored.

At the beginning of the final quarter, Hughes scored and Bensalem again went into the lead, this time for good. Ely made a foul and the score was 28-26. Hughes scored two field goals and the count jumped to 32-26. VanAken tried to push Bristol into the game with a double-decker but Hughes again added a pair of field goals to make the count 36-28. Lamont scored under the net and Hughes put the finishing touches on the scoring with a well executed long shot. Final score was then 40-38.

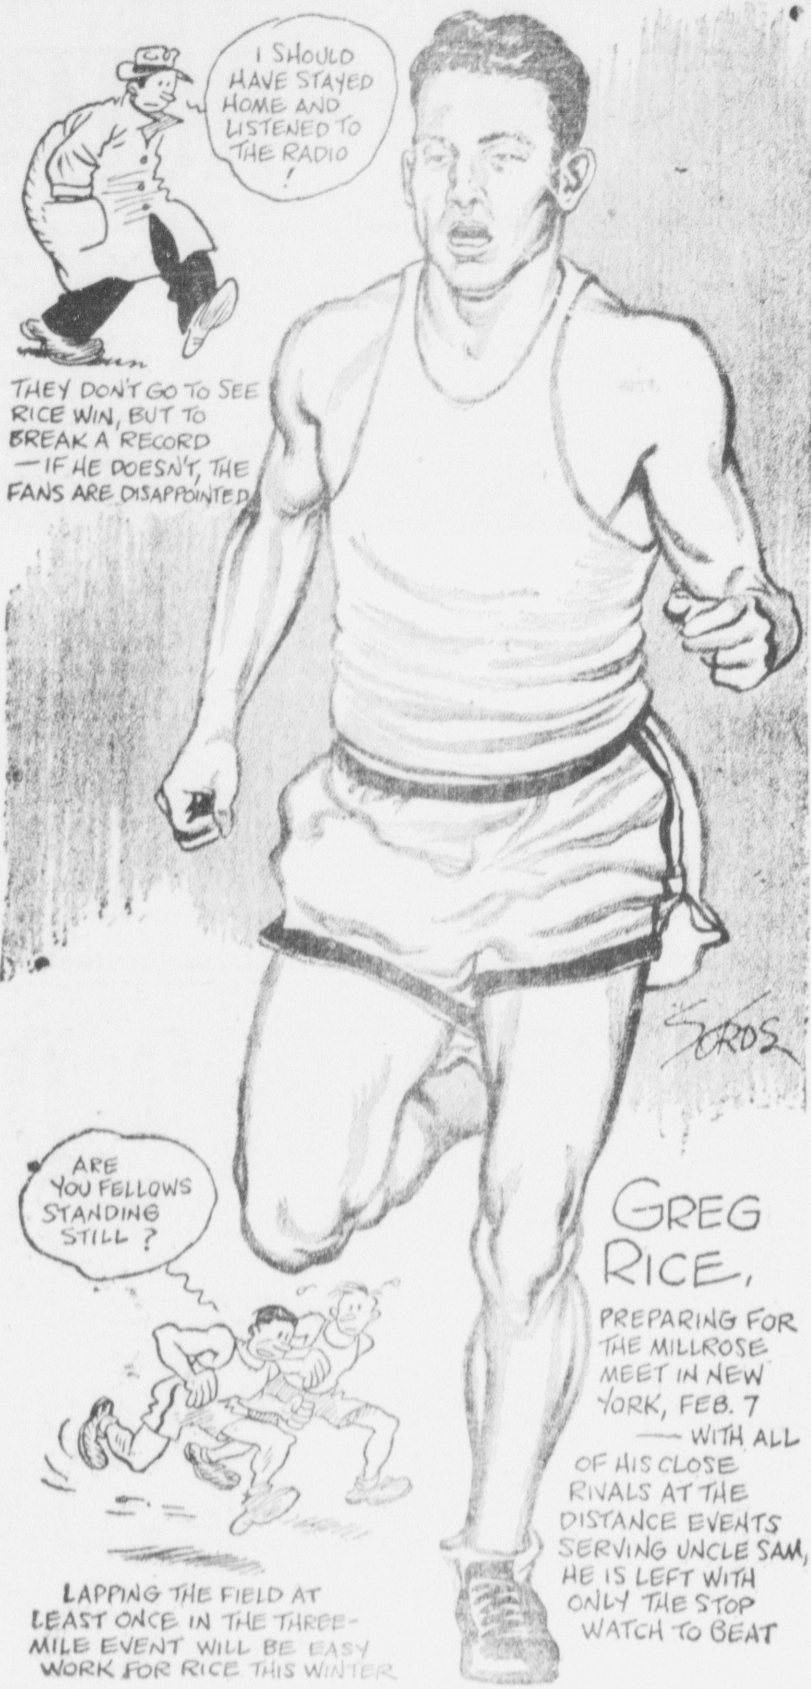

Hazel Lamont scored 20 points to lead the Bensalem scorers while Hughes' last period surge gave her 14 points for the night. VanAken had 19 of Bristol's points.

"CHICK" DI ANGELO LEADS BRISTOL HIGH BOYS TO VICTORY OVER BENSALEM BOYS

By Jack Gill

Led by the brilliant left-handed stabs of Anthony "Chick" DiAngelo, Bristol High School scored a repeat performance over Bensalem last night in the Cornwells Heights gymnasium. The sharpshooting Bristol forward tallied 22 points as the locals tabbed a 47 to 31 verdict.

Bensalem presented a rejuvenated brand of ball last night to erase some of the sting from that 62 to 8 beating suffered earlier in the year. The Owls were scrapping and fighting all the way and hung close throughout the first half. They only trailed by a one point 10 to 9 margin at the finish of the first semester and hung on by a 15 to 11 tally until near the end of the second chucker. Then Bristol began to hit the bucket and the halftime advantage jumped to 21-11.

The first half was the whole ball game from a fan's angle. The Owls completely stunned Bristol by playing an aggressive type of game. Referee Hoerst, who handled the proceedings single-handed, was forced to call many personal fouls as the going became stormy. But most of it was due to the fact that the Owls were in there plugging away at fever pitch tempo.

The Bunnies hit a belated stride in the second half and with Di Angelo and Hopkins leading the parade, won the ball game going away in waltz fashion. The winners hopped out to a decisive 40 to 23 lead at the end of the third period.

Chick Di Angelo played one of the best games of his "off" and "on" career in piling up a total of 22 markers. His left handed shots, booming from difficult unorthodox angles, found the range and slipped through without hitting the rim. In addition to playing outstanding offensive ball, DiAngelo also played a splendid floor game and hit his mates often with several slick passes. Jimmy Hopkins also had a night for himself with 12 points.

Patterson and Pete Everett were the leading point makers for the Blue and Gray cause. The former dropped in 12, while the latter was good for 11. Well built Len Eldys played an aggressive game. The win was Bristol's fifth against as many setbacks.

Relates Thrilling Story of His Escape From Europe

the back was written my complete history."

The German method of killing was spoken of, the Nazi soldiers being instructed to shoot the enemies in the stomach "as the death agony is longer, and the others might decide to surrender."

One startling statement given was that in 1½ hours men in Nazi planes killed 40,000 women, children and men in a 25 square mile area which was thickly populated. "The ministers, priests and principals of schools were instructed by German officials to tell their people that only 4,000 were killed. "One dear old priest whom I knew well announced to his parishioners, 'I have been told by the Germans that there were only 4,000 killed instead of 40,000. Let us pray only for the 6,000 of this parish who have been killed.'"

Deciding that he must leave Holland and reach his home in Brussels, VanWalt took his car from the garage during the early morning hours, and immediately a soldier appeared telling him he could not use it as it was confiscated. Argument was to no avail, and asking where he should turn the car in VanWalt was informed to go to a certain market place. "I started off in that direction, then figured that inasmuch as I owned the car, and it was registered in Belgium, and if the Germans could confiscate it, I could 're-confiscate' it. So all went smoothly for a time as I drove along a Holland highway that fine Spring morning.

Halted at one spot a distance on, I was told I could not go to Brussels as the low country was being inundated. I was told to back into a designated parking place, which I did, but as soon as I was 'parked' I thought it would be a good idea to shoot forward, and my foot went down hard on the accelerator. Alf went well again until I came to the sea water which covered the highway. But I kept on, trying to keep in the middle of the aisle of trees which lined the highway. I continued and heard that sickening sound of a motor starting to die just as I came to the end of the inundated section.

Again I was stopped by a soldier who told me I could not cross the bridge ahead as it was about to be blown up. "Can't you wait a minute?" I asked and at that second the bridge was blasted to nothing. "At a farm-house the refugee purchased two large barges, and after getting his car aboard the two he paddled with his hands across the wide river. "When I reached the other side the Dutch soldiers couldn't believe their eyes. But they helped me hoist the car to the top of the dike, and on I sped. Stopped again a soldier told me to leave the car and lie on my stomach, as parachutists were being dropped from Nazi planes in that area. I complied, but soon turned on my back to better watch the sight. A black speck would hurtle from the planes, then the 'chute' would unfold. But hidden by a hedge were Dutch machine-guns, who shot the Nazis when they within about 1,000 feet of the ground. Two Nazis, seeing the plight of their fellow-countrymen, unbuckled their parachutes and plummeted to earth. Not one reached Dutch soil alive. It was a sickening sight even though they were our enemies. Everyone of the Nazis wore a Dutch uniform. We found out later of other Nazi invaders, in Dutch uniforms, who marching past Dutch soldiers would sing Dutch songs and call a word or two of Dutch in salutation, then when past, the Nazis would turn and shoot the Dutch soldiers in the back.

"Continuing on my way I was traversing the highway from Antwerp to Brussels when stopped at the border. I was told the road was barricaded by trees, etc., to keep out the enemy. But I had promised my wife I would be home and I always keep my promise," smiled the speaker. "So I took back roads until I reached a section posted 'Land Mine Area.' But there was no other way so I took a chance. I came through alright. At the Belgian frontier soldiers asked me 'Where did you come from?' I told them by what route. 'You're still alive?' they queried. 'No, I'm dead,' I said, but they didn't believe me. Walking back a distance with the soldiers they showed where my automobile wheels had missed a mine by only two inches at one point, and by two or three feet many places."

The difficulty of making headway thereafter was told of, with troops congesting the highways, but the homecoming was described as "most cheerful." Mr. and Mrs. VanWalt remained in Brussels for two days until the Germans captured Louvre, then decided they must leave. The students were told that the Nazis have destroyed all the American cemeteries of the last war, together with all the monuments and tiny crosses.

"The German mentality is different than any other in the world," explained the speaker. "The Germans talk a lot about Kultur. They spell it with a 'K' because the Americans, the English and the Dutch still have command over the 'C' (sea)."

So congested was the highway they travelled when Mr. and Mrs. VanWalt left for Paris that they covered only 18 miles the first day. Thousands of cars, bicycles, and pedestrians filled the roadways, the people seeking escape. The second day they made 150 miles, staying overnight in a school house in a small town in France. "But there was no sleep, as air raids occurred every ten minutes. Next to my wife and I there slept a very fine Belgian family, a father, mother and three children, aged four to eight years. We agreed to meet that night at a town further on. We left 15 minutes later than our Belgian friends, and coming upon a long line of cars which had been machine-gunned, my wife called my attention to the car of that Belgian family we planned to meet. The man was standing by the car, and he and his wife looking at us did not see us. We asked where the children were, and they pointed to the rear seat where the trio of tots were—dead. The pilot had returned a minute later, leaned out of his craft only 50 feet from the ground, grinned and waved his hand to them.

Later when other planes strafed cars with machine gun bullets, in the car ahead of our four people were killed, and the car behind us was entirely destroyed. Our car did not have a scratch and my wife and I were unharmed."

How the Nazis would drop from their planes by the hundreds sharply-pointed arrows of steel one foot long was told of. "Dropped from a height of 1,000 feet these arrows would go right through buildings. Hundreds of people were killed by them."

The arrival at Bordeaux, which was crammed with refugees, with resultant death to thousands by bombs, was told of. In securing a visa to enter Spain Mr. VanWalt was "forced" to pay the agent 500 francs each for six passports for his family. "You will know how 'pro-German' Spain is when I tell you I had to pay $6 a gallon for gasoline when they learned I was a native of Holland. Spain is still today a very dangerous country."

Following advice of the consul to leave Spain, the VanWalt family went to Portugal, where they sold their car and attempted to secure boat passage for the United States. "This was refused until the United States consul intervened and a Greek steamship company agreed to take them aboard. "I was taken ill the day after I boarded the boat, but the first thing to greet my eyes as we neared New York was the Statue of Liberty seen through my port-hole window. I couldn't help waving my hand at it. To say I'm grateful to be here is putting it too mildly. The friendship and hospitality of your countrymen is wonderful. I didn't know a soul when I landed, but I have made good and true friends."

NEW YORK ARCHERS TO OPPOSE RAMBLERS

Tonight at the Frankford Roller-drome the fast-skating Bristol Ramblers will have as their opponent the New York Archers.

The Archers are composed of a group of players from the sidewalks of New York City, who have played hockey since childhood, and are at present leaders of the Roller Hockey League of Central Park.

Manager, Ed Schaefer, of the New York Club, in booking this game with the Ramblers, heaps praise on his goalie who, he says, plays with seven different clubs in the New York area. Coach Pop Keene feels that his squad of Ramblers will have to be at their best tonight to be able to cope with this highly praised outfit.

It is looked forward to a large gathering of Bristol sport fans to be on hand to witness the opening tap off which will take place at 10:30 o'clock at the Frankford Roller-drome.

Local Cheese Fans Can Still Enjoy Connoisseur's Feast At Budget Prices

Cheese has always been a cherished standby in times of emergency because of its compactness, thrifty price and high food value. In spite of war conditions and the big demand for American-type cheese for emergency use, cheese fans in this country can enjoy such popular varieties as Camembert, Swiss, Brie, Baby Gouda and Liederkranz cheese, all with made-in-America labels and at budget prices. And delicious American-made Blue cheese can be depended on to take the place of Roquefort, which has disappeared from the market.

Processed packaged cheeses, of all types will also be available and the cocktail cream spreads include a Blue cheese type as well as sharp American, Limburger, Pimento, Pineapple and other varieties. Adequate supplies of Italian-style and American-style grated cheese guarantee the usual serving of our popular "au gratin" dishes.

Bermuda Appetizers

Chop Bermuda onion fine, marinate and drain. Spread on crisp crackers and cover with slice of Liederkranz cheese. Thin slices of rye, pumpernickel or whole wheat bread which have been buttered may be used instead.
